Russ refuse to pay NY to SF air fare

The Russian track and field team is finally here, but a last-minute hitch in traveling arrangements which the State Department finally had to settle almost created an international incident.

Upshot of the dispute was that the National Amateur Athletic Union had to come up with an estimated $25,000 to $30,000 for round trip airplane tickets between San Francisco and New York.

According to Daniel J. Ferris, AAU secretary emeritus, a previously-signed agreement called for the Russians to pay their way to the meet site, but the visitors indicated by letter just last week that they were paying only for the travel costs to New York.

The State Department was contacted by AAU officials in New York and it was decided, since the meet is part of the two governments' cultural exchange program, to pay the Russians' transcontinental plane fare to avoid international friction.

"It was a misunderstanding of the agreement on their part," Ferris told Associated Press.

Ferris said the AAU would talk to meet officials at Stanford in an attempt to gain reimbursement for the added expenses.

The AAU and Stanford will split the gate on the two-day meet.

Al Masters, Stanford athletic director, said today "we're not involved." He indicated the extra expense money will not come out of Stanford's share of the proceeds.

"Our agreement calls only for picking the Russians up at the airport, transporting them to Stern Hall, feeding them and making them comfortable during their stay. Then we put them back on the plane. That's all," Masters emphasized.

He noted that $53,000 will come off the top of the gate receipts to repay the State Department for a loan to send the American team to Russia last year.

Meanwhile, the Midpeninsula is preparing for an invasion of thousands of track fans next weekend. Motel and hotel owners in the area report they are booked up solid, and some of them have been so for three months.

Rickey's Hyatt House, which will serve as press headquarters, rented 150 of its 195 rooms to news media representatives three months ago. The remaining 45 went "fast," a spokesman said.

Some rooms are still available in the San Jose and Redwood City areas. Motel operators reported no change in room prices for the weekend.

Power fails at Stanford before meet

The electric power supply for Stanford Stadium failed at 12:04 p.m. today, just three hours before the start of the two-day Russian-American track and field meet.

Stanford electricians worked feverishly to restore power as television and wire service crews grew progressively more frantic. Air time for the television coverage of the event was 3 p.m. The power was still out at 1:30 p.m.

The traffic control signal light at Palm and Arboretum drives also was affected by the power blackout. Stanford police helped unsnarl heavier than usual traffic.

Cause of the failure was not immediately known.

Dramatic end to track meet

By DICK O'CONNOR

John Thomas of the United States and Viktor Tsybulenko of the Soviet Union marched shoulder to shoulder around the track at Stanford Stadium.

Each carried the flag of his nation. A United States Marine Corps band played the national anthem of each country.

There were 80,000 lumps in the throats of the 80,000 fans who watched.

And thus ended the United States-Russia track and field meet as the sun cast long shadows across the bright green grass of the stadium.

It was a fitting climax to probably the finest track meet ever held in this country.

There were records, there were disappointments, there were thrill and there was humor.

It was the kind of meet that those who saw it — more than 150,000 fans did in two days — will be telling their grandchildren about.

MEMORABLE

The stirring march around the track at the close of the meet was every bit as memorable as Valeriy Brumel soaring over the high jump bar at 7-5 or Hal Connolly whirling the hammer 231-10.

Following Thomas and Tsybulenko in the parade were Ralph Boston and Igor Ter-Ovanesyan. Then came Olga Connolly and Antonina Zolotukhina.

Little Willye White marched with big Tamara Press of the Soviet Union. Trailing out behind were almost all the members of both teams.

The Russians wore their blue uniforms with C.C.C.P lettered in white across the chest.

The Americans were in white with U.S.A. in red and blue across the back.

The hats?

The Russians wore straws gained in trades with fans, or red hats given to them by meet officials.

Most of the Americans wore the white, short-billed hats that the Russians had worn into the stadium.

After the parade the teams locked arms in a long line across the field. The band played "God Bless America" and the meet was officially over.

It was tireless Vasily Kuznetsov who both started and finished the meet. He won the first event, the 100-meter dash for decathlon en-

He plodded over the finish line at 7:05 Sunday evening at the conclusion of the 1500-meter run for decathlon entrants.

In between he picked up enough points to win a gold medal.

Announcers H. D. Thoreau and Ed McCauley provided most of the humor. During the 20-kilometer walk, McCauley announced:

"After 13-kilometers Golubnichay leads and Vedyakov is second. There are no other contestants in sight."

When the race ended, the Russians were more than five minutes ahead of the first American.

Golubnichay and Vedyakov each had taken a victory lap around the track and were walking out of the stadium when John Allen wiggled in on his way to the finish line.

Thoreau and McCauley did a superb job with the pronunciation of the multisyllable Russian names.

It was a short announcement that finally tripped up H. D. He said U.S.S.R. so much that he called one American contestant a representative of the U.S.S.A.

The real winner in the meet was international sportsmanship. You had to get the feeling that there was hope for the world as Ralph Boston and Brumel ran a victory lap together and Thomas and Sybulenko marched side by side.

Blast off in sprints

Huge crowd watches Russian track team workout

More than 3,000 fans crowded into Stanford's Angell Field Wednesday afternoon to watch the Russian and United States track teams work out. It was one of the largest crowds ever to attend a practice session.

Biggest, best dual meet ever

The Soviet-American track meet at Stanford Stadium on Saturday and Sunday will be treasured by those who saw it, we predict without hesitation, as one of the most memorable sports spectacles of a lifetime.

Soviet high jumper Valeriy Brumel and American hammer thrower Hal Connolly provided pinnacle performances with world record efforts in their events. But the entire level of the meet was almost as high. The fact that meet records were set for more than half the events on the program underlines the excellence and intensity of the competition.

There was also the thrill of seeing the rival competitors from opposite sides of the North Pole march arm-in-arm around the track in the closing ceremonies, flushed with the joy of sport and waving a warm response to the plaudits of the huge crowd. One wished the political leaders of the two nations could have linked arms and joined in that magnificent show of sportsmanship.

The crowd — a wonderfully spontaneous and enthusiastic audience — set a record of its own. The two-day attendance total of 153,500 established a world record for a dual track meet. (We were misled last week in thinking the 1961 U.S.-U.S.S.R. meet in Moscow drew a single-day crowd of 130,000.)

Moreover, the meet was splendidly run under the direction of Stanford track coach Payton Jordan.

Its success, coupled with that of the 1960 U.S. Olympic Trials at Stanford, stamps the Peninsula and Bay Area as a foremost track center. Perhaps this renown will one day bring us the Olympic Games themselves.
